2020 U.S. Census kicks off in W.S.

The Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs will kick off the 2020 U.S. Census count for Oregon this Thursday, March 12.

The tribes were formally requested to host this inaugural event by the United States Census Bureau.

Before the start of the Thursday public presentation, George Aguilar Sr. will complete the first count for the state of Oregon 2020 U.S. Census. He will do this online earlier in the morning at his home.

The Warm Springs Complete Count Committee requested that Mr. Aguilar perform the service on behalf of the Confederated Tribes and the committee.

Mr. Aguilar is a Wasco elder and life-long resident of Warm Springs. He is a Korean War veteran who during his life has worked as a laborer, fisherman, logger and construction manager. He is the author of the tribal history study When the River Ran Wild. Mr. Aguilar turns 90 this year.

The public census kick-off events will follow at the Agency Longhouse. This is the agenda for Thursday:

9 a.m.: A meet and greet with Mr. Aguilar.

9:30: Welcome address and comments.

10: Warm Springs Early Childhood Education Mini Powwow.

11: to 1 p.m.: Community meal, with the opportunity to complete the census online

Census data directly impacts how the federal government allocates more than $675 billion every year for programs and services vital for tribal communities. These include Medicaid, social services, housing, public safety, veterans services, emergency preparedness, education, school lunches and more.

Tribal members and reservation have historically been undercounted in the census, which happens only once every 10 years.

Under-counting of tribes and reservations can lead to underfunding of the very communities most in need. The Census Bureau values tribal partnerships, and is committed to a complete and accurate count of tribal nations.

The goal the 2020 Census is to correct the under-counting:

"I encourage all our tribal members and Warm Springs residents to participate in the census to help provide a better future for our community and future generations," says Tribal Council Chairman Raymond Tsumpti Sr.

In March Census enumerators will bring you an invitation to your home, with information about participating in the 2020 census.

National recognition for Geo Visions

Warm Springs Geo Visions is a semi-finalist in Honoring Nations 2020, an award recognition given only to the most deserving of tribal enterprises across the country.

Honoring Nations is an award of the Harvard Project on American Indian Economic Development, and the Native Nations Institute of the University of Arizona. At the heart of the program:

"The principle that tribes themselves hold the key to positive social, political, cultural, and economic prosperity—and that self-governance plays a crucial role in building and sustaining strong, healthy Indian nations. Honoring Nations serves as a vehicle for shifting the focus from what does not work to what does, fostering pride and confidence in the ability of American Indian governments to make positive contributions to the wellbeing of their respective communities and citizens."

And the program is founded on the idea that "Native nations can benefit from having greater access to innovative ideas and effective governing approaches. Honored programs serve as important sources of knowledge and inspiration, and our experience shows that they are drawn upon by communities throughout Indian Country and far beyond."

Geo Visions is one of only six semi-finalists across Indian Country to be considered for the Honoring Nations 2020 award. The winning enterprise receives national recognition, among government entities and beyond. As the Harvard Project states:

"The high public visibility and news coverage of Honoring Nations also permit non-Native policymakers, the media and the general public to see what Native nations are actually doing in the drive for self-determination."

The tribes' Geo Visions enterprise provides a unique service in the region. The team works for the protection and preservation of cultural resources of the tribes.

Projects of the enterprise include archaeological research at specific sensitive sites, with oral history research and indigenous knowledge to give the tribal context to each site.

This work includes not only the lands of the reservation, but the vast Ceded territory of the Confederated Tribes. Geo Visions provides its service to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the Bonneville Power Administration, Portland General Electric, and the Oregon Department of Transportation, among others.

And there is a great potential for growth of the enterprise, said Angelina Howell, Geo Visions director.

The Geo Visions team includes Ms. Howell. Larry Squiemphen, Geo Visions GIS manager and oral history coordinator, who has been with the enterprise since it began. Lindon Hylton, primary investigator and lead archaeologist. Alex Atkins, lead crew chief and archaeologist. Brandon Gilliland, project manager. Rich Danzuka, cultural technician.

The Confederated Tribes formed Geo Visions 15 years ago. From a modest beginning the enterprise has established a reputation for professionalism in its field, as witnessed by the Honoring Nations recognition.

Vital water matter before Tribal Council

There are five separate irrigation districts in the upper Deschutes River basin, the North Unit and the Central Oregon districts being the biggest.

For 70 years the districts have competed for river water, which they would then distribute to the farm operations and irrigators throughout the region.

The practice so far has been to store water in reservoirs during the cool months of winter, and then release large quantities of water within a relatively short period of time, during the summer months. This has led to serious degradation of tributaries of the Upper Deschutes.

The scenario is now in the process of changing, as the irrigation districts would face perilous legal and financial consequences, were the practice to continue. The districts are now forced to cooperate, and develop a management approach that considers a much wider range of elements.

This is clearly a matter of great significance to the Confed-erated Tribes, a large and senior water right holder in the basin. The tribes are also working, at great expense and effort, to restore fish runs in the upper reaches.

Bobby Brunoe, general manager of tribal Natural Resources, has been the lead contact person for the tribes, as the new upper basin irrigation plan unfolds.

Mr. Brunoe and Tribal Council met last week with officials of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA)—Fisheries, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Bureau of Reclamation.

Bridget Moran, of U.S. Fish and Wildlife, reviewed how the situation has developed to this point: The past irrigation practices, Ms. Moran said, led eventually to conflict with the Endangered Species Act, specifically regarding the Oregon spotted frog.

The potential for litigation, and an imposed restriction on irrigation water, then led the irrigation districts to develop a draft management plan, called a Habitat Conservation Plan for an incidental take permit, to be issued by the federal agency.

From the tribal perspective—and with nothing against the spotted frog—the salmon is the most important species to be protected, said Tribal Councilman Captain Moody.

The situation, he said, is reminiscent of what happened some years ago with the spotted owl. Like the spotted frog, the owl became endangered due to activities carried out beyond the reservation. Then in addressing the crisis, Councilman Moody said, the agencies and parties involved seek to impose restrictions upon the tribes, who had nothing to do with it.

The goal of the new plan is to return a more natural flow to the tributaries and river, Ms. Moran said, as opposed to the winter storage-summer release practice. A hope is that this will also benefit the fish, she said.

In response to the coronavirus

Oregon this week became the latest state to join those that have declared a state of emergency due to the novel coronavirus. Gov. Brown made the declaration on Sunday.

As of earlier this week, there were at least 15 confirmed cases of the illness in the state. Counties that reported these cases were: Washington, Klamath, Douglas, Clark and Multnomah.

As of this printing, there had been no confirmed case in Jefferson County or Central Oregon. The situation is continuously monitored and can change quickly.

Meanwhile, the Confederated Tribes, Community Health, Emergency Management and Warm Springs IHS staff continue to work the Center for Disease Control and the Oregon Health Authority to prepare for any potential development.

The following information is provided by the clinic, as advice to help limit any possible spread of COVID-19, or other respiratory disease:

Continue to practice good hand washing. Cover your cough. Stay home when you are sick. Clean all high touch areas at work and at home.

High touch areas are those:

- Commonly touched by multiple people: Door knobs, computers, phones, chairs, light switches, remote controls, sinks, faucets, etc.
- All horizontal surfaces such as countertops, desks, stair railings, tables, etc.

Use the cleaning agents that are usually used in these areas, and follow the directions on the label.

Most disinfectants are effective against coronavirus and influenza.

If you do not have cleaning supplies, a one-part bleach to 10-parts water solution is effective in cleaning for this virus.

You can prepare a bleach solution by mixing five tablespoons bleach per gallon of water; or four teaspoons bleach per quart of water.

Symptoms to watch for are a fever above 100.4, cough, and shortness of breath. Please call the clinic if you have these symptoms. They will make a plan for evaluating you.

For questions about COVID-19 please call 211, or the Warm Springs Community Health Nurses at 541-553-2460.

This week marks anniversary of Falls flooding

Sixty-three years ago this week saw the heart-breaking disappearance of the mighty Celilo Falls. And now with each passing year there are fewer and fewer living people who still remember the falls, though the site retains great cultural importance to the tribes.

The Native language names of the area—Wy-am is an example—of the falls refers to “echo of falling water” or “sound of water upon the rocks.”

On the south side of the falls was the Wasco community of Wyam; and on the north side the Wishram community of Nix-luidix, a site now under the water of The Dalles dam. The area was the longest continually inhabited site in North America. The tribes traded with visitors who visited from as far away as modern day Alaska to the north, California to the south, and the Rocky Mountains to the east.

The main waterfall consisted of three sections: a cataract, called Horseshoe Falls or Tumwater Falls; a deep eddy, the Cul-de-Sac; and the main channel.[3] These features—stretching for more than nine miles—were formed by the Columbia River’s relentless push through basalt narrows on a final leg of its journey to the

Pacific Ocean.

The migrating fish had difficulty passing the falls, providing for the best fishing in the region. A famous feature was the series of wooden scaffolds built out over the river, fished with long-handled dip nets. They caught the variety of salmon, lamprey and sturgeon.

As more white settlers arrived in the area, during the 1930s and ‘40s, the government leaders advocated for the construction of hydro-electric dams on the Columbia River. The completion of The Dalles dam happened in 1957, with the flooding event covering the falls on March 10 of that year.

Sonar imaging shows that the rock formations of the falls remain below the reservoir of the dam.

Remembering the Falls

In those days, during spring flooding, ten times more water passed over Celilo Falls than passes over Niagara Falls today...

The record of human habitation proves Wy-am to be one of the longest occupied sites on the continent. For thousands of years, Wy-am was one of history’s great market places. A half-dozen tribes had permanent villages between the falls and where the city of The Dalles now stands. As many as 5,000 people would gather to trade, feast, and participate in games and religious ceremonies.

Elders and chiefs regulated the fishing, permitting none until after the First Salmon ceremony. Each day, fishing started and ended at the sound of a whistle. There was no night fishing. And when a fisher was pulled into the water—most who fell perished in the roiling water—all fishing ceased for the day. In later years, each fisher was required to tie a rope around his waist, with the other end fastened to the shore.

Elders and others without family members able to fish could take what they needed from the catches. Visiting tribes were given what they could transport to their homes. The rest belonged to the fishers and their families.

All this changed on the morning of March 10, 1957, when the massive steel and concrete gates of The Dalles Dam closed and choked back the downstream surge of the Columbia River. Four and a half hours later and eight miles upstream, Celilo Falls, the spectacular natural wonder and the age-old Indian salmon fishery associated with it was under water.

That was 63 years ago. But the spirit of Wy-am—which some say means “echo of falling water”—still lives in the traditions and religions, indeed in the very soul of Columbia River Indian people.

When the United States government submerged Celilo Falls in 1957, it attempted to compensate the tribes for flooding their fishing sites, though this was an invaluable part of the tribal economy. The government did not, however, purchase their fishing rights. Those rights, as set forth in the 1855 treaties, were not affected, and exist to this day.

Give your input on IRMP

The Branch of Natural Resources Integrated Resource Management Plan community survey is soliciting input from tribal members and residents of the Warm Springs Indian Reservation.

The purpose of the survey is to document the community’s priorities, preferences and concerns regarding the management of the tribes’ natural resources, in regard to the Integrated Resource Management Plan (IRMP) 2022 revision.

The IRMP is the tribes’ strategic plan for the comprehensive management of the reservations resources, including forestland and range.

The goal of IRMP is to create a balance within natural resources management actions that reflects social, cultural, economic and natural resource values of tribal members.

Questions in the current survey include matters such as:

Are you familiar with the tribes’ Integrated Resources Management Plan?

What is IRMP? And:

Based on your opinion how successful have the tribes been in achieving ‘the goals, standards and best management practices’ included within IRMP?
