In the Pacific Northwest, a coalition of Native tribes celebrate the river’s partnership with Native American tribes. The Confluence Project commissioned Ms. Lin to design six public “art landscapes” along 438 miles of the Columbia River system, from the basalt fish-cleaning table engraved with the Chinook creation story at Gpsa Dredge permits State Park on the Washington coast, to the story circles at Sacagawea Historical State Park, and the Listening Circle amphitheater at Chief Timothy Park on an island in the Snake River near Clarkston, Washington. Each site was chosen by Columbia River tribes to mark a significant confluence—or spot where bodies of water or cultures converge. Five of the six are complete. “The Confluence Project builds that bridge,” said Antoine Minthorn, chairman of the Confluence Project board and a member of the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation.

Some Native American tribes in the Pacific Northwest are enfranchised, or self-governing, and they have competing opinions on how best to save endangered salmon runs, say tribal leaders. “We are all salmon people.” Penney said in the release. “Salmon are the foundation that tribes based near the Columbia River tribes in the Pacific Northwest, to the story circles at Sacagawea Historical State Park, and the Listening Circle amphitheater at Chief Timothy Park on an island in the Snake River near Clarkston, Washington. You begin to wonder, Will, what is our legacy?” Mr. Minthorn said the project works to unite a small group of people—Native Americans—with their fellow citizens in learning how to “become American” and how best to steward the land together.

Fisheries update for Sherars Falls

Due to an upgrade in the number of spring chinook returning to the Columbia River—and the Warm Springs National Fish Hatchery likely meeting breeding requirements—the joint Fish and Wildlife Committees have raised fishing restrictions at Sherars Falls. Fishing is now open from Thursday at 7 p.m. through Monday at 6 a.m. Only adipose-marked spring chinook may be kept. Wild fish must be released alive.

All chinook, other than wild spring chinook, may be harvested from July 16 through March 31 of the following year.

The remainder of the Deschutes is closed through July 15. Other salmon species, with the exception of sockeye, may be kept.
