Tribes roll out new youth skatepark

The new 8,000-square-foot skatepark opened last week at Elmer Quinn Park, with an exciting afternoon of skateboarding, a cookout, music, and a giveaway of more than 150 skateboards. The giveaway was sponsored by PacificSource Health of Central Oregon.

The tribes and skatepark organizers hosted the grand opening with a turnout of hundreds of guests. During the opening ceremonies, except during the blessing, skaters from around the Northwest were demonstrating their skating skills across the many ramps and half-pipes at the new park. The weather was great and the day was a fun and joyous occasion.

People with the Skatepark Project, one of the key partners who helped with fundraising and planning, were on hand. Mandy Mendez with the Skatepark Project, for instance, flew in from Denver for the opening.

"I wanted to be here to see this cross the finish line," Ms. Mendez said. "And it really turned out beyond what I could have imagined."

Tribal Council Chairman Jonathan Smith gave an opening address. "We would like to thank Tactics Skateboard Company, and Collective Concrete for coming to the tribes and meeting with our wonderful staff in coordinating this project," Chairman

Smith said. "And thank you to the Skatepark Project for all the hard work you did with the many donors." He mentioned some who deserve a special recognition:

Ginew Clothing, PacificSource, Visit Central Oregon, the Marie Lamfram Foundation, the Ford Family Foundation, the Jefferson County Commission who matched a tribal donation of $10,000.

As skaters from around the region demonstrated their skills, Council Chairman Jonathan Smith (above) opened the event with a thank-you to the many who helped make it happen.

Years of culture and history at the Museum

Example of one of the exhibits on display in the museum (above); and an image of the architecture as seen at sunset.

The Museum at Warm Springs first opened its doors to the public in early spring 30 years ago. The original idea for a museum of tribal history and culture had been talked about for at least three decades before that.

Since the 1960s, "We could see that the old ways were disappearing, the old languages were disappearing, and pretty soon none of our young people would know where they came from or who they were," Warm Springs Chief Delvis Heath said at the time of the opening. "That's when we decided to build a museum."

Tribal Council in 1974 adopted a charter establishing a preliminary museum board, at the time called the Middle Oregon Indian Historical Society. Twenty years of planning and fundraising brought in more $3.2 million, at the time the largest amount ever committed by an Indian tribe to a museum.

And when the Museum at Warm Springs opened in the spring of 1993, it was the first tribal museum in the state of Oregon.

The museum now contains the most exquisite collection of Plateau Native American artifacts. As the museum is celebrating its Thirty-Year Anniversary, there are events through the year, such as this week with the photo exhibit by reservation photographer Edward Heath (below). The first-ever Clean-up Day last weekend was also a big success (see page 4).

To this day and into the future, the Museum At Warm Springs preserve the culture, history and traditions of the three tribes.

'An Eye for the Rez' opening this week

An Eye for the Rez: Edward Heath Photography opens this Thursday, April 6 at the Museum at Warm Springs. The show features photographs by renowned Warm Springs photographer Edward Heath.

"I do not specialize in any specific form of photography," Edward says. "I mainly try to capture things I find interesting along roadsides and trails.

"And I like to capture things that have non-obvious beauty, or things others take for granted."

Mr. Heath was born in Madras and grew up in the Simnasho area. He is the nephew of Warm Springs Chief Delvis Heath.

His upcoming exhibit is curated by Warm Springs museum curator and exhibition coordinator Angela Anne Smith.

Mr. Heath also had a solo exhibition of his photography at the museum in 2016, and his work has been featured in other exhibits around the region. Since his first show seven years ago, Heath has become known for his portraits, nature and wildlife photography. Support for An Eye for the Rez is provided by a grant from the Ford Family Foundation. The show will be on display through May.

Renovation progress at Kah-Nee-Ta

Concrete trucks were rolling down Highway 3 in March, as the Kah-Nee-Ta Resort and Spa work continued, with a focus on pouring concrete for the large pools. The old pools needed to be completely replaced.

When complete, the new attraction will feature a large natural hot springs soaking pool, lazy river pools, a youth zero-depth entry pool, and youth soaking pool.

The Kah-Nee-Ta renovation team plans to launch a new website in the near future, said Jim Souers, executive director of Warm Springs Economic Development.

“There’s a lot going on with Kah-Nee-Ta,” Mr. Souers said. “We were busy in late March with the concrete work, and we’re making great progress.”

The new pools are now completely re-concreted and finished. “That was a major task, a major achievement,” Mr. Souers said. “And we’re still working at opening this summer.”

Besides the concrete work, there is much other work to do. For instance, the waste lagoons have to be fixed and repaired, another major task. Plus, “We’re remodeling the hotel, and we’re putting in a restaurant in the area that used to be the gift space area,” Mr. Souers said.

He reminds the community that the entire Kah-Nee-Ta Village area is an active construction site and for safety and security reasons is completely closed to the public.

In 2021, Tribal Council approved $4.58 million to fund Phase 1 of the project, to bring back the former Village area of Kah-Nee-Ta.

Another $1.5 million was approved for the lagoon system. Council also in 2021 approved the 15-year agreement with the Ski Bowl group to operate and develop Phase 1. Future resort phases can happen as funding becomes available. This economic development and recovery project is allocated from funding of the American Rescue Plan of 2021.

Howlak Tichum ~

The following is the Eulogy, by Jamey Skinner McCloud, honoring the late Dr. Ron Pound. The words are presented here at the request of Aurolyn Stwyer, awtwey Mr. Pound's daughter:

It is a great honor to honor a great man, so thank you for inviting me here to pay respects to our beloved elder. I was not raised in the Indian ways, so please forgive me if I speak in error—my only intention is to show respect for our beloved elder and this community.

In listening to the storytelling of our beloved Elder, who we honor here today, I am struck that without our culture, without our ways, we are not a people—we are simply flesh and bones.

The effort to destroy—physically, spiritually and culturally—the peoples that have nurtured this land since time immemorial is only prevented by those who protect and revive the cultural ways.

We have gathered here together to lay to rest a Legend in protecting and reviving the cultural ways of many Indian peoples. We gather to honor his legacy—to show we understand the importance of his work and are committed to carrying it on.

In a 2006 recorded storytelling, our beloved Elder told of his growing up on these lands, learning from his elders, and attending public school in Pendleton. He said, “There was nothing in the schools that taught us about our culture.” So he changed that for future generations. He made education more valuable and more relevant.

He was a first in many things that he did, but he was ultimately a man of service—that is what he was taught by his elders. When he worked as a smokejumper, he protected lives and land. When he worked as an educator, he taught students, his co-workers, U.S. Members of Congress, and even U.S. Presidents. He played a fundamental role in establishing many of the Indian civil rights laws that protect our families today.

Although the bar for U.S. Presidents is a low one when it comes to Tribal sovereignty and the rights of Indian peoples, President Nixon is notable in his support of establishing many Indian civil rights. But he didn’t get there by himself. He was taught. And our beloved Elder, the Legend, was one of Nixon’s greatest teachers. The Legend educated those in power and brought people together, across political lines, by working with congressional Republicans and Democrats to pass Indian civil rights laws.

Audre Lorde, a descendant of slaves, once said, “the master’s tools will not dismantle the master’s house.” You have to be very smart and determined and courageous and compassionate and persistent to dismantle the legal and political shackles that Indian peoples faced when the Legend began educating U.S. politicians.

The Legend was instrumental in passing civil rights laws that have impacted the lives of so many: the Indian Child Welfare Act, the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, the American Indian Religious Freedom Act, and the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act.

• With the Indian Child Welfare Act, he helped save children being stripped of their culture and sense of identity. Yes, being a parent has its challenges, but irreparable damage is done to a child’s soul when they lose their sense of who they are.

• With the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, he helped change what had been his own experience, of not being taught Tribal history, language, culture and traditions—these things that helps us be connected to something greater than just ourselves, to have a history and purpose.

• With the American Indian Religious Freedom Act, he helped protect the rights of people indigenous to this land to continue the traditional practices of ceremony and worship and use of sacred objects that have sustained culture throughout time. When your culture is taken from you, you lose your sense of self. The Legend helped people remember and re-establish traditional language and practices that were on the verge of being lost forever.

• With the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, he helped Congress understand that robbing graves is a crime, and helped draft the law that said human remains and sacred objects should be returned home.

And when he couldn’t move them in the halls of power, he fought them in the courts.

When the State of Oregon claimed that that Klamath and Modoc could not use peyote in traditional religious ceremonies, The Legend got involved. Because even if it wasn’t his way, he knew the importance of supporting Tribal rights and sacred practices. He joined the fight, and they won in the U.S. Supreme Court.

He worked on—and helped win—water cases with Tribes who may not have been traditional allies, but who needed each other to win important cases to protect Tribal sovereignty.

He also fought for fishing rights—something promised in the Treaties that ceded the lands that became the states of Oregon and Washington. The Boldt decision affirmed Tribal sovereignty and fishing rights. This fight was important to protect the ways—and the food—that have sustained the peoples of this land since time immemorial: the fish, wild game, plant foods, roots, and huckleberries—in all the usual and accustomed places.

He was a man of great education—from Oregon schools to his PhD from Washington State University, where he studied Anthropology and Archeology and music. He revived drumming and dance traditions, then helped teach them to young people.

He believed profoundly in the value of education, saying we are “obligated to ensure that our young people receive an education.” He first made education relevant, then he made sure that people had access to it. To teach the old ways. Because knowing who we are and where we come from is what makes us a people, more than simply flesh and bones.

In the 1980s, when many Tribes were on the brink of losing their languages, as the elders passed, he worked to provide cultural and language education for young people.

He was a culture bearer. And he impacted education of our entire state when he helped spearhead the Memorandum of Understanding between Oregon’s nine federally recognized Tribes and state universities to develop historical and cultural education for future generations. This affected me personally—when I studied Water Law and Indian Law at the University of Oregon. We utilized the Longhouse that is next to the Law School.

That was just part of the impact he had.

I know I am not telling you anything new. Many of you here have witnessed these things with your own eyes. But I share them to remember. These are gifts that our beloved Elder, this humble leader, has given us and the legacy that he leaves us.

He was a modest man. In a 2006 recording, The Legend said he was taught to, “do your best to serve the needs of your people. That’s what I was brought up to do.” He said, “always seek the welfare of the people. And do all that you can because we’re only here in this life for a brief time.”

That is his legacy and lessons to us. He impacted us all—this community, this state, and this country—in ways we are not able to fully understand or appreciate.

Our broken hearts are grateful.

And with his passing, he now hands these responsibilities to us.

As you take your well-deserved rest, our beloved Elder, please know that we will honor your legacy by carrying on your work.
Rest in Peace and reclaimed Power.

‘Basket Case’

While it tends to be used in a fairly lighthearted way today—usually describing someone who constantly makes stupid mistakes, who crumbles under pressure or gets overly excited and nervous—the original ‘basket case’ is an unexpectedly gruesome reminder of just how bloody the War became. In its original context, a basket case was a soldier who had been so badly injured that he had to be carried from the battlefield in a barrow or basket, usually with the implication that he had lost all four of his limbs.

Remember, Pay attention to your Veteran! Every Veteran is different, and many may not show any signs of intent to harm themselves, but some actions and behaviors can be a sign that they need help.

Around Indian Country

Much of West Coast faces salmon fishing ban

Experts fear native California salmon, which make up a significant portion of the Pacific Northwest’s fishing industry, are in a spiral toward extinction.

Much of the salmon caught off Oregon originate in California’s Klamath and Sacramento rivers. After hatching in freshwater, they spend three years on average maturing in the Pacific, where many are snagged by commercial fishermen, before migrating back to their spawning grounds, where conditions are more ideal to give birth. After laying eggs, they die.

Already California’s spring-run Chinook are listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act, while winter-run Chinook are endangered along with the Central California Coast coho salmon, which has been off-limits to California commercial fishers since the 1990s.

The Chinook already faced challenges, with dams blocking their historic retreats to the chilly upper reaches of Northern California’s Sacramento River and the Klamath River along the California-Oregon border. Decades of development have disrupted the natural flow of rivers and polluted waters.

In 2020, the federal government ended federal protections for millions of waterways, allowing for more water to be pumped out of the Sacramento River Basin for farming despite warnings from biologists that it could harm salmon runs in the future.

Fishers say river water temperatures increased with the diversions for irrigation, killing more eggs and hatchlings and preventing the stocks from bouncing back amid the drought.

“This one ain’t on us,” said Bob Maharry, 68, a lifelong San Francisco-based fisherman. “This has nothing to do with overfishing. This is poor management of water.”

LEVEL:	Beginning	FOR:	Kinder & 1st grade
LESSON:	pick up and put down 1	TIME:	30 minutes

GOAL: The student will learn how to pick up and put down objects that they use in their daily class time.

OBJECTIVES: The student will be able to:
1. pick up and put down their pencil,
2. pick up and put down their book
3. pick up and put down their pencil box

PROCEDURES:
1. Introduction: Tell the children in Indian to take out their pencils, book, and boxes. Demonstrate to them what you want by showing them your instruments. Place everything on the desk in front of you.

2. Implementation: Say pick up the pencil while demonstrating picking it up. Say put down the pencil while putting it down. Go through the command at least three times until you feel that the students have internalized the command then say the command without demonstrating it.

Go on to introduce the commands with the book and then the pencil box. When you feel that the children have learned these new commands mix them up by telling them to pick up one thing after the other always switching the order of the objects. Once the children have learned this then have them pick up and put down two things at a time.

3. Closure: After the children have learned how to pick up and put down the objects then command them to pick something up, stand up, walk to other place in the room that they learned in the moving around lesson and put the object down on a previously learned place (i.e. the table, rug or window) and then have them return to their seats.

English	Indian (one person)
pick up the pencil	Agelga ak'inułmat
put the pencil down	A≈ima ak'inułmat
pick up the book	Agelga icha≈wi
put the book down	A≈ima icha≈wi
pick up the box	Aaelaa waskan
put the box down	A≈ima waskan.

4. Follow-Up: Use the commands and objects in the following day's lesson.
If the children learn these commands quickly but yet you do not feel that they are ready for new words, then introduce the words slowly and quickly.
Example: Pick up the paper quickly, Put down the book slowly.
