District meetings this week

The district meetings for the 2024 proposed tribal budget are starting this week. The Southeastern meeting, at first planned for this Tuesday, was being rescheduled at press time for this publication. The Simnasho District meeting is this Wednesday evening, October 18 at the Simnasho Longhouse; and the Agency Director meeting is this Thursday evening, October 19 at the Agency Longhouse.

The proposed general fund tribal budget for 2024 on the first of this month. The proposed budget has a projected increase of $2,234 million from the 2023 approved tribal budget. The change in revenue from the 2023 budget includes increases from Indian trust revenue in the Warm Springs were in partnership with the Oregon State University-Oregon Institute of Technology and the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs. Leona Ike, OSU-Cascades Tribal Liaison and Cultural Advisor, coordinated the effort for the event was to recognize the significance of the university’s ‘Land Acknowledgment,’ the OSU statement for which says:

Oregon State University recognizes the impact that its land grant history had on Indigenous communities in Oregon. Through the Morrill Act of 1862, which established land grant universities in the U.S., the federal government seized nearly 11 million acres of land from 250 sovereign tribal nations, with little or no compensation.

The October Indigenous People’s Day events at OSU-Cascades were in partnership of the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs.

This October 6-7, featured tribal the artistry, performances, including the Black Lodge Drone show and Kot-Num Road. With the additional building, there will be a renovation of existing space for better efficiency of operations and delivery of services.

After three decades so far, "We’ll be ready for the near 30 years," said Hyllis Daughnman, clinic chief executive officer. This work will also include a drive-through for the Pharmacy, and a separate and Faster delivery roadway area, so trucks and emergency vehicles avoid going through the parking lot, among the improvements. The planning for this began a few years ago, interpreted for a time by email. In 2021 the clinic conducted the initial public outreach, collecting community input on the proposal, regarding design and location, for instance. The project now is about 30 percent through a final design and development phase, and input is still welcome.

Most recently, Mr. Daughnman has been working with Tribal Council and Land Use toward a near 20-year time to include the expansion one, requirement before moving forward with final design and construction.

Here are some of the Halloween activities coming up around the community over the next couple of weeks:

Covid vaccines at clinic
The Warm Springs IHS clinic has received a limited amount of the new covid vaccine. The clinic began administering the vaccines last week.

First priorities for vaccinations at this point are elders 65 and older; and anyone with a health condition that makes the person vulnerable to serious illness from covid. Underlying health conditions include such conditions as organ transplants, immune compromised, diabetes, and cardiac disease.

As the clinic receives additional quantities, the vaccines will be available to all. This week the clinic is providing vaccines to priority individuals, as described above, during open vaccine hours: 10 a.m. to 12 noon, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday; and also 1 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Turf floor for new pavilion
The new Health and Wellness pavilion is getting closer to a grand opening, with the turf flooring now installed. The pavilion, on campus by Wasco Street, is 11,520 square feet in size. The building will be ideal for many kinds of events, activities and trainings of Health and Human Services and others wishing to use the facility.

The plan is for a groundbreaking in spring or early summer of next year, Hyllis said. The new project will be a great improvement for the health services to the community, and all of this has been done in partnership with the tribes, Joint Health Commission and the Health and Welfare committee as IHS and the Confederated Tribes work to improve health outcomes.

As the new project moves forward, also this year the clinic has seen improvements to the existing clinic, including a new roof on the building. Meanwhile, Betsy Marcum, grounds maintenance, and Brent Graybael, facilities manager, and crew put in new and brighter LED lighting for the parking lot, with a new coat of paint on light poles. Rae Ewing, behavioral health specialist, is working with a youth group on a Zen rock garden for an area behind the clinic, yet another example of community health and wellness projects happening these days at the clinic.

An important initial question in the building of a new Warm Springs Jail will no doubt be related to infrastructure, specifically related to sewer and water at the current preferred building site. A feasibility study considering the preferred site is under way, with the review of public comments from earlier this year. When the report is released, the teams working on the plan, Tribal Council and the community will have a chance to consider the issues identified in the study.

The preferred site is at the Warm Springs industrial park, where buildings rely on septic, as there currently are no sewer connections. The jail feasibility study will be a conclusion of a first phase of the project; and addressing the issues in the report will be an initial step in the next phase. When the issues are worked out, construction funding will be available for the project, as the Department of Interior, and Department of Facilities Management and Construction Indian Affairs Office announced in 2021.

A question may be whether or not to have the new jail connected to a wastewater system, or rely on septic.

There may be some infrastructure aspect needed for the new site, in the case of a sewer hookup for inmates, that may require an additional funding source beyond the jail funding itself. Final decisions will ultimately be up to the tribes in considering the options, said Brenda Brunner, BIA Agency representative.

In the meantime, the tribes and BIA continue to contract with the Northern Oregon Regional Corrections Facility, or Norcor, for housing tribal inmates. This is about a 70-mile drive each way. BIA funds the housing of the Warm Springs inmates at Norcor.

Close to 400 members of the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs live in the Madras area. The members who live on tribal reservations are often their family members and friends. At the same time, many tribal members who live on the reservation shop in Madras, work there, go to school, etc. The reservation and Madras share enough, from a tribal equitable perspective, that the two areas should vote within the same boundaries when choosing representatives, for instance. That is the opinion of voter equity advocates like Jaylyn Suppah of the Confederated Tribes of Northwest Indians, for instance, that separating the reservation from the tribal association with Madras dilutes the voting equity of the Confederated Tribes.

This same conclusion is reflected in the recent Charge 'Report Card' on redistricting, giving a grade to all 50 states on their redistricting maps. Oregon earned a C-minus, mainly because of the tribal equity issue. To quote the report under the 'Inadequate incorporation of feddahs' category: ‘Not all advocates believed that public input was adequately incorporated into the final maps. A community organizer and member of the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs [Jaylyn] believed that legislatorstokenized tribal input rather than truly listening to it.

‘For example, many pieces of public comments ignored that, while the proposed (and final) maps technically kept tribal lands together, they split the Warm Springs Reservation from the city of Madras.

‘While Madras is not within the confines of the reservation, it is a city in which many tribal community members live, shop, and go to school. Further, in the previous official map, the two were kept together.’ The new Oregon redistricting map was finalized in the fall of 2021 and will apply again in the General Election of 2023.

Some dams blocked the adult salmon migration on the river. Some salmon stocks became extinct. Some were listed as endangered or threatened. The large number of dams on the Snake River and on the Snake River made the rivers no longer fast. They are now slow. The clerk water above the dams on the salmon smolts down migration to be longer. It now takes about six weeks or more instead of the original three weeks.

Another danger is predator fish like the Northern pikeminnow and, transplanted predators such as raccoon, walleye and now nativepike, which all compete for food like the salmon. Smolts in shallow water around gill nets are at risk of being eaten as they pass through the high natural flow way before they can reach the ocean, that was the natural flow way their ancestors took. Some salmon stocks down migrated from the spillway. In 1981 the Snake River tributary, the Columbia Snake River reach of coho became extinct. Then by 1986 all Snake River coho became extinct. The dams kill salmon. The lower Snake River dams need to be breached.

Dam removal spurs hope in Klamath Basin

By the end of next summer, four dams will be gone: the J.C. Boyle dam, the Copco dams 1 and 2, and the Iron Gate dam. Their removal is both a source of hope and anxiety throughout the basin, as it will eliminate some awesome summertime whitewater and drain the reservoirs where people currently enjoy living and recreating on lakes. But it will also reopen hundreds of miles of salmon habitat that could be a lifeline for the threatened fish that are vital to Native American cultures throughout the Klamath Basin. It will also restore thousands of acres of land, some of which could be returned to Native American tribes such as the Shasta Indian Nation, whose members were displaced by dam construction more than 100 years ago.
