Native Market at St. Charles

Community members are invited to a day of celebration in recognition of Native American, American Indian and Alaskan Native Heritage month at St. Charles Madras this Thursday, November 14.

The celebration will include a Native Market with 10 artisan vendors from the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs.

There will also be complimentary fry bread tacos, and a presentation of the new land acknowledgment and artwork in the hospital Galleria.

The Native Market is open to the public from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., and the land acknowledgment presentation will take place at 1:15 p.m.

During the event, St. Charles president and CEO Dr. Steve Gordon will share why a land acknowledgement—developed in partnership with members of the Confederated Tribes—is important to St. Charles and surrounding communities.

“This acknowledgement is a way for us to pay respects to the original inhabitants, and to recognize Indigenous people as the original stewards of the land upon which we reside and work,” Dr. Gordon said.

“We hope that by sharing this acknowledgment we can aid in emotional healing, invite personal inquiry and reflection, and help set a positive tone for future generations.”

The presentation will also include Kiksht language speakers from Madras High School and the Warm Springs Academy.

The land acknowledgment and accompanying artwork will be on permanent display in the main entrance at St. Charles Madras.

In the coming months, the acknowledgment—below is a rendition—will also be installed at other St. Charles locations. Learn more about St. Charles' land acknowledgment on the St. Charles website.

Best steelhead return in 60 years

The 2024 return of adult steelhead to the Pelton-Round Butte hydropower project is the largest since the 1960s with months still to go in the run. The returning fish herald progress in long-term fish re-introduction effort.

Biologists from the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs and Portland General Electric have collected more than 250 returning adult steelhead at the Pelton Round Butte hydroelectric project.

This is the largest steelhead return since the dams were completed in the 1960s.

Scientists say these notable early returns bode well for the year ahead, as Deschutes River steelhead runs typically span from July or August until the following March.

“We’ve already surpassed the entire run from last year, which was our previous record,” said Megan Hill, manager of environmental science at PGE’s hydropower projects.

“While there is still a long way to go toward our long-term goals for fish reintroduction, these returns demonstrate important progress, and point to the efficacy of our science-based strategies for fish recovery.”

Steelhead at the Pelton-Round Butte fish facility.

From the 1960s to 2010, dams on the Deschutes River blocked the migration of ocean-going salmon and steelhead, or anadromous fish.

In 2005, when the Pelton Round Butte hydropower project was relicensed, the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs and PGE—co-owners of the hydropower project—began an ambitious effort to change that, alongside many agencies and environmental organizations.

The reintroduction program is a long-term, collaborative project to restore anadromous fish runs to a fully reconnected Deschutes River Basin. Restoring these runs includes aiding the downstream migration of juvenile fish as well as the upstream return of adults. The adults spawn in the Metolius, Upper Deschutes, and Crooked Rivers above Lake Billy Chinook.

All 250 of these returning steelhead spent time in the Upper Deschutes Basin as juveniles before traveling to Lake Billy Chinook on their way to the ocean.

Once they reached the reservoir, the young fish were collected in a facility called the Selective Water Withdrawal, or SWW, and released downstream of the Pelton Round Butte project’s lower-most dam to continue their journey.

After about two years in the ocean, these steelhead traveled back up the Columbia and Deschutes Rivers, where they were collected again as adults at Pelton Dam, and released into Lake Billy Chinook to continue upstream to their spawning habitat.

“I remain inspired by what I heard from elders and mentors as a young person,” said Austin Smith Jr., the tribes’ Natural Resources general manager.

“Their teachings and their stories echo of a time when our rivers on the reservation had so many fish you could walk over them.

“In exercising our treaty-reserved rights, we collaborate with our partners to restore this fishery to healthy levels,” Mr. Smith said.

“The progress we’re making through our fish reintroduction program is a start, and it gives us hope that we can once again have enough fish for the first people of this land to sustain themselves.”

Environmental scientists from PGE and the tribes attribute this year’s return to a number of factors, including beneficial ocean conditions, which can vary from year to year, and improvements to fish management practices.

These advancements include acclimating young fish in-stream prior to release to adjust to the water conditions and imprint on the river’s unique scent, which aids adult fish in navigating back to the same waterway to spawn.

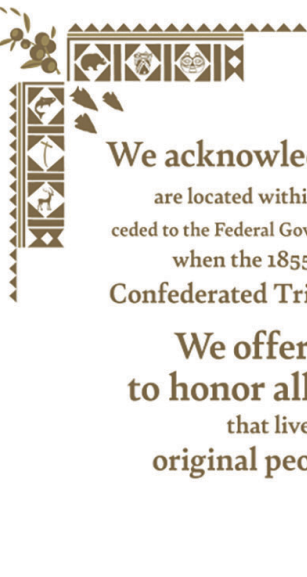

Steelhead continues on 6

We acknowledge that the St. Charles campuses are located within the 10 million acres ceded to the Federal Government, also usual and accustomed areas, when the 1855 Treaty was signed with the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs of Oregon.

We offer this acknowledgment to honor all Native Americans that live in this area and who are the original people of this land.

Rare award for victims' advocacy

Charlieann Herkshan recently earned the Haven from Domestic Violence and the Wasco County Domestic Violence Council Award for Advocacy. Her advocacy work is with the Columbia River Inter-Tribal Fish Commission.

Charlieann Herkshan

Haven and its partners found that Charlieann is deeply passionate about her work, and deeply caring for her community.

"She goes above and beyond in her work to make certain survivors of violence feel safe and supported through the legal process or those seeking restorative justice," Have noted in the award presentation.

In addition, Charlieann has organized events to bring awareness to Domestic Violence and Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women/Perons, MMIW/P.

Charlienn has also helped build relationships with community partners that have improved survivor outcomes.

Her work embodies the spirit and passion that is required by the Advocacy Award.

Charlieann received one of Haven and partner's more rare awards, as the victims' advocacy recognition, named in memory of Angelica Mendoza, is not given each year, as other awards given during the Haven annual candlelight vigil ceremonies.

The advocacy award is merit-based, and is only given when an individual has been identified that meets the high bar set by

Ms. Mendoza during her employment at Haven from Domestic Violence.

The presentations this year were October 15 at Sorosis Park in Northern Wasco County.

The theme was 'Why I stayed.'

The award presentations featured excerpts from survivor statements, as well as a very powerful story of survivorship that was shared by a survivor herself.

This yearly event is used to shine a light on domestic violence, and to bring it out of the shadows where it flourishes.

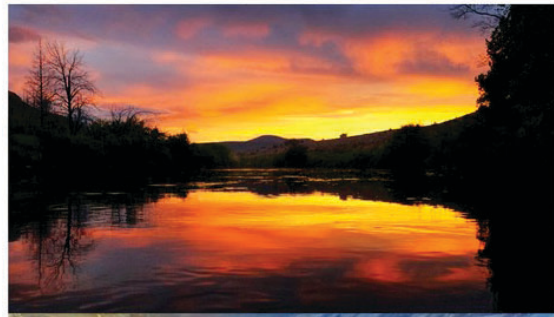

This year 58 people were in attendance.

Schools in Action

Show Up Everyday - Students Flourish Here

In Jefferson County School District 509J, we believe that students flourish in our schools in a number of ways. Whether a student is engaged with a lesson in their classroom, connecting with one of the many resources we have available in our schools to serve our families, participating in a club, activity, or athletics. There are countless ways for our students to flourish. In order for that to happen, they need to be at school.

Attendance is critical for our students. We strive to make school a place where our students want to be day in and day out. Our goal is to make our schools a welcoming place for our students, families, and our staff. We want our schools to be a place where our students develop meaningful relationships with one another, their school staff, and administration.

Did you know?

1 in 6 children in Oregon are chronically absent.

In Oregon, students are considered chronically absent when they miss 10% of the school year, or 18 days.

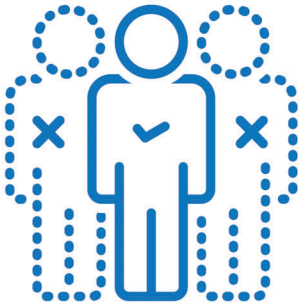

This significantly compromises a child's ability to read at grade level by the end of third grade.

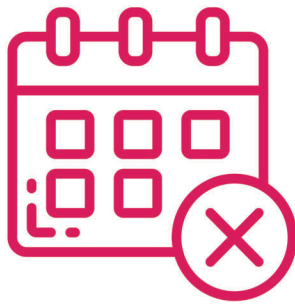

The lost instructional time exacerbates dropout rates and achievement gaps.

Missing School Adds Up

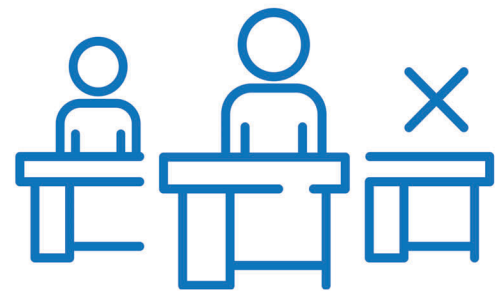

Two days absent every month:

20 days missed every school year

This means your child missed more than 10% of the school year

This means your child is considered chronically absent from school. Even if the absences are excused.

Students who are chronically absent are less likely to succeed academically and more likely to drop out of school.

Steelhead

Biologists have also improved juvenile fish collection procedures by installing a stress relief pond to allow fish more time to recover after handling, and releasing fish into the Lower Deschutes at night when predators are less active.

These adjustments, among others, reflect a commitment to adaptive management—an approach that involves ongoing data collection, evaluation, and thoughtful course corrections supported by science.

“The reintroduction effort has always been about getting enough fish to return so that they can find a mate in their natural spawning grounds. Returns have been building over the years as we’ve learned more and incorporated new strategies into the effort,” said Terry Shrader, Pelton-Round Butte mitigation coordinator at the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife.

“This year’s record return of reintroduction program steelhead demonstrates real progress and affirms our many years of hard work.”

Using radio tracking technology, biologists will monitor the adult steelhead released into Lake Billy Chinook to gather data about their movement and spawning activity as they travel upstream.

In a few years, the offspring of these adults will begin their own journey to the ocean, following the current downstream to start the cycle over again.
